

Matthew Mayabb, the son of David Mayabb and Karen Loyd, spent five years living in Snellville, GA before his family relocated to Shelbyville, KY in 1989. Matt was very active during the high school years at Shelby County High School, with memberships in the Beta Club, National Honor Society, and the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. Matt also excelled on the soccer field, being a three-year starter on the varsity soccer team and co-captain his senior year.

After being recruited by several schools, Matt decided to attend Bellarmine University in 1998 on partial academic and soccer scholarships. Ongoing injuries led to a change in priorities after his sophomore year, and he decided to forego his final two years of athletic eligibility to concentrate on gaining valuable work experience. With an interest in human resources, he earned HR-related internships with the likes of Aegon Institutional Markets, Mercer HR Consulting, and Papa John's International. Matt was involved in the founding of the Bellarmine Society for Human Resource Management, and held the position of President from 1999 to 2002. In 2000, Matt was initiated into Delta Sigma Pi, a professional business fraternity, and served as the Vice President of Pledge Education in the spring of 2002. He also functioned as an Executive Council representative from 2001 to 2002.

Following Matt's graduation from Bellarmine with a BA and double-major in Business Administration and Economics in May of 2002, Matt gained employment with SHPS, and specialized in FMLA leave of absence administration for the third-party benefits administrator. He began his career at the company by providing guidance to participants and processing medical certifications before being promoted to Quality Assurance and eventually the Implementation team, where he was involved in the management of new and existing clients.

With an interest in expanding his project management skill set, Matt accepted a position in Account Installation at Humana in 2006, where he oversees the installation of fully-insured groups and guides the operational team during the implementation process. By effectively managing expectations, the process, and timelines, Matt has been able to reduce cycle times for the majority of his implementations.

In 2005, Matt began pursuing his MBA degree from Auburn University via a distance learning delivery method. Attracted to the program's curriculum and reputation among the academic community, he has researched topics such as Emotional Intelligence, Lean process improvement techniques, and sports marketing as part of his course requirements. Matt plans to graduate from Auburn in December of 2007.

Matt has been the proud husband of Jennifer since 2004, and the two welcomed the birth of their daughter, Mareyna, in July of 2006. Matt has been a Deacon at Woodland Baptist Church in Louisville since 2005. His outreach to the community has included serving food at homeless shelters, working at Habitat for Humanity projects, and volunteering his time for church-related activities. His hobbies include playing soccer, exercising, reading, watching sports on TV, listening to music, traveling, and spending time with friends and family. A little known fact about Matt is that he helped win three intramural sports championships while at Bellarmine: two in flag football and one in basketball.

I am passionate about helping others set and achieve their short and long-term objectives.

My gifts include communication, empowerment, execution, leadership, problem-solving, and relationship management.
